EPA jumped gun with its Pebble mining project report

Anchorage Daily News

The Environmental Protection Agency's very quick, very speculative, very broad watershed analysis affecting mining -- read Pebble prospect -- in the Bristol Bay region is a nifty example. The proposed mine -- "proposed" being the key word -- is located ...

EPA answering mayday to protect fish

Anchorage Daily News

Last week the Environmental Protection Agency released "An Assessment of Potential Mining Impacts on Salmon Ecosystems of Bristol Bay, Alaska." Gov. Sean Parnell, his attorney general, foreign-owned mining companies, both our US senators and KGOP all ...

Moms Taking Their Clean Air Message To The EPA

ThinkProgress

Inside the wagon were more than 8000 comments from Moms Clean Air Force members supporting a proposed rule from the Environmental Protection Agency that will limit carbon dioxide emissions from newly constructed power plants. I brought those messages ...

Court: Group couldn't sue Ohio EPA

Youngstown Vindicator

The decision turned back a 2010 ruling ordering the Ohio EPA to lift an exemption it had been giving since 2006 to emitters of 10 tons of pollution or less per year. There were roughly 66000 small pollution emitters registered in Ohio at the time of ...

Forum to be held on EPA's carbon emissions rules

WDIV Detroit

The US Environmental Protection Agency issued the first-ever limits on heat-trapping pollution from new power plants in March, ignoring protests from the energy industry and Republicans who fear regulation will raise electricity prices and kill off ...

New Coal-Fired Plant Is Unlikely

Wheeling Intelligencer

Unless something similar to what commissioners envision happens, it is entirely likely every coal-fired power plant in the Ohio Valley will be closed down eventually, because of the war on coal mounted by the EPA and President Barack Obama.
